General Marking Guidance

- All candidates must receive the same treatment. Examiners must mark the last candidate in exactly the same way as they mark the first.
- Mark schemes should be applied positively. Candidates must be rewarded for what they have shown they can do rather than penalised for omissions.
- Examiners should mark according to the mark scheme - not according to their perception of where the grade boundaries may lie.
- All the marks on the mark scheme are designed to be awarded. Examiners should always award full marks if deserved, i.e. if the answer matches the mark scheme. Examiners should also be prepared to award zero marks if the candidate's response is not worthy of credit according to the mark scheme.
- Where some judgement is required, mark schemes will provide the principles by which marks will be awarded and exemplification/indicative content will not be exhaustive.
- When examiners are in doubt regarding the application of the mark scheme to a candidate's response, a senior examiner must be consulted before a mark is given.
- Crossed out work should be marked unless the candidate has replaced it with an alternative response.
- Plans in the lined response area of the question paper/answer booklet should not be marked unless no other response to the question has been provided. This applies whether the plan is crossed out or not.

Specific Marking Guidance

When deciding how to reward an answer, examiners should consult both the indicative content and the associated marking grid(s). When using a levels-based mark scheme, the 'best fit' approach should be used.

- Examiners should first decide which descriptor most closely matches the answer and place it in that level.
- The mark awarded within the level will be decided based on the quality of the answer and will be modified according to how securely all bullet points are displayed at that level.
- Indicative content is exactly that – they are factual points that candidates are likely to use to construct their answer.
- It is possible for an answer to be constructed without mentioning some or all of these points, as long as they provide alternative responses to the indicative content that fulfils the requirements of the question. It is the examiner's responsibility to apply their professional judgement to the candidate's response in determining if the answer fulfils the requirements of the question.

Placing a mark within a level

- Examiners should first decide which descriptor most closely matches the answer and place it in that level. The mark awarded within the level will be decided based on the quality of the answer and will be modified according to how securely all bullet points are displayed at that level.
- In cases of uneven performance, the points above will still apply. Candidates will be placed in the level that best describes their answer according to the descriptors in that level. Marks will be awarded towards the top or bottom of that level depending on how they have evidenced each of the descriptor bullet points.
- If the candidate's answer meets the requirements fully, markers should be prepared to award full marks within the level. The top mark in the level is used for work that is as good as can realistically be expected within that level.

Question Number	Answer	Mark
3	Reward responses that explain how the writer presents her ideas about how young people can protect the environment. Responses may include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • the opening sentence directly addresses the reader with a thought-provoking question: ‘are we living in harmony with nature?’ • the initial paragraph uses negative language, which presents a depressing picture of the current state of the world: ‘self-destruction’, ‘destroying’, ‘detrimental effects’, ‘helpless and powerless’ • the writer does suggest that there is hope, ‘potential’, which would encourage the reader to try the ideas that are being discussed • the advice is offered in a reassuring way: ‘you can’, which reassures readers that it is still possible to change things and make a difference • the contrast between ‘countries and corporations alter their policies and action’ and ‘we as individuals also have the potential’ emphasises that it is not just big organisations that can make changes but all of us • the writer uses examples of activities that are relevant to young people: ‘beach clean-ups’, ‘fundraising events’, ‘why not donate...’, ‘taking shorter showers’ • listing is used to show the range of items that can be recycled, ‘plastic, paper and metal waste’ (tricolon) and the benefits of recycling, ‘helps reduce landfill pollution, raw materials and fossil fuel consumption’, which emphasises how important recycling is • the use of words that suggest that ways to protect the environment are easy: ‘effortlessly’, ‘simple’ (which is repeated) • the writer uses statistics to shock the reader, ‘0.03% of the 70% of water available to us’, which highlights how important it is to save water • the writer uses language to appeal to ecologically-aware youngsters: ‘eco-friendly’, ‘minimise carbon footprint’, ‘habitats’, ‘ecosystems’ • the writer offers clear and simple explanations, ‘Plastic is one of the most significant contributors to soil and marine pollution’, ‘Methane is one of the most potent greenhouse gases that contribute to global warming’, which helps to engage and inform the reader about fairly complex ideas

	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • the use of numbered sub-headings clearly identifies the writer’s ideas and helps the readers to find the information they want • the text has an informal, friendly tone • the writer uses inclusive pronouns throughout: ‘we’, ‘you’ • questions are used throughout to engage the reader. 4	One mark for any one of the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none">• (it is) destabilising• (it is) breaking down• natural patterns are being disrupted• the consequences could be catastrophic• there are negative tipping points/points of no return• we do not know when we might cross these tipping points• transformation starts slowly but accelerates	(1)

Question Number	AO1 Read and understand a variety of texts, selecting and interpreting information, ideas and perspectives.	Mark
5	One mark each for any two of the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none">• wildfires/hurricanes/heatwaves/floods/storms /droughts are more common• increasing in frequency/rapid changes• more and more extreme• the weather seems to be on steroids• natural disasters appear less and less natural• it is not the 'new normal'• seeing the beginnings of a changing climate• it is being caused by humans/greenhouse gas emissions• Earth's natural systems have been acting as a shock absorber/smoothing out the dramatic transformations/these will not last forever• the changes will become more dramatic	(2)

Question Number	Answer	Mark
6	Reward responses that demonstrate how the writer presents her ideas about climate change. Responses may include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • the opening paragraph uses short sentences for impact: 'Climate change. It doesn't sound that bad.' • the writer uses positive language to suggest reasons that people do not take the problem seriously: 'quite pleasantly', 'appealing possibility', 'does not sound so bad'. This supports the idea that climate change might not be seen as a problem to some people • the use of the rhetorical question, 'what's not to like?', which is intended to make the reader think and consider the issue • the negative language that is used to describe the changing climate, 'destabilising', 'breaking down', 'catastrophic', which would alarm and frighten the reader • the description of 'doomsday glaciers' suggests how serious and irreversible the effects of climate change might be. The use of the word 'doomsday' suggests that there is a crisis • the metaphorical use of 'the snowball' links to the references to the 'Greenland ice sheet' and 'glaciers'. This adds power to the sense of inevitability of the outcome of global warming • the use of listing of the effects of changes in weather patterns, 'wildfires, hurricanes, heatwaves, floods, storms, droughts', which presents a picture of a frightening future for the reader • the repetition of 'more' emphasises how serious the impacts might be • the use of the idiom 'on steroids', which suggests how extreme and intense the weather is becoming • the repetition of 'less' contrasts with the previous repetition of 'more', which suggests how out of control the weather is becoming • the use of 'dramatic', which is repeated, emphasises how significant climate change might be • the contrast between 'faraway future' and 'right here and now' shows how serious the writer thinks the climate crisis is • the use of the tricolon, 'honesty, integrity and courage', which are admirable qualities which may appeal to the reader's sense of decency

	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • the asyndetic tricolon, ‘drastic, immediate, far-reaching’, highlights the challenges faced by people trying to change attitudes • the metaphorical description of ‘the bathtub’, which gives a clear and accessible idea of the problem to the reader • although the tone of the majority of the text is pessimistic, there is hope: ‘a small chance of avoiding’ • the metaphorical language used in the final paragraph, ‘precipice’, ‘closer to the edge’, which again presents a strong visual image of the dangers • the final emphatic sentence which repeats ‘right here’ and ‘right now’ • the use of the inclusive pronoun ‘we’ throughout.
